MISS LEARY GIVES DINNER

Stag Affair by W. S. Andrews-Elegant Costumes at Newport Horse Show.

KEWPORT, Sept. 2.-There still remains much of the holiday air that prevailed resterday that the summer colony has not begun to show signs of diminishing. There has been plenty for diversion, with the horse pienic for the Grand Duke Alex show, a picnic for the Grand Duke Alex-andre Michaelovitch, who also dined with the Russian Ambassador and Mme. Bakhmeteff, and Miss Leary's dinner and dance for Mr. and Mrs. Charles Astor Bristed.

The Bakhmeten's dinner was small, there being only twenty guests, and afterward some others came in for dancing to the some others came in for dancing to the music of a band of negroes. The picnic was organized by Mrs. John Astor, her party having luncheon at the beach. Mrs. Astor had to hurry away before the picnic was over, as she received word of the death in Philadelphia of her brother, J. R. Barton Willing.

According to his present plans the Grand Duke will leave on Thursday to renew his visit to Mr. and Mrs. Barclay Warburton, and he intends to sail on the next trip from New York of the France.

Miss Leary's dinner was given for Mr. and Mrs. Charles Astor Bristed of Lenox at her villa, Park Gate. It was served at one large table, which was decorated with American Diva to Introduce Paterson Policeman to Musical World Next Year.

PATERSON, N. J., Sept. 2 .- Edward J. McNamara, who is known in this section as "Paterson's opera singing policeman," will tour the United States in 1914 with Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, the nouncement confirmed by the diva at her country place at Singac, near Caldwell. Mme. Schumann-Heink first heard of Mc-Namara last spring when she read of the preparations for the four day musical festival at the Paterson armory. She was his voice and his refusal to leave the police force for the musical world unless he could be assured of a salary large enough to permit him to continue to take care of his aged parents. She decided to hear him.

His powerful tenor voice charmed Schumann-Heink and she complimented him.

A few days ago the policeman was summoned by the diva to her Singac country she made him an offer to tour the country with her next year, which he accepted. "He is such a nice boy." Schumann-Heink said of McNamara, who is now 34. There was a large audience at the Harris Theatre last night to witness the first production in this city of a play by Bayard Veiller called "The Fight." Undoubtedly there were many of the author's friends in the gathering. there were others, attracted by that altogether human if not sympathetic desire to discover if a man who had put one great success to his credit would be cap-great success to his credit would be capable of landing another. The phrase is that of the lobby and is reproduced here for its impressive colloquial tang.

It might as well be admitted at the outset of any report of the incidents on the stage last night at the Hudson Theatre that Mr. Veiller in the third act of "The Fight" proved himself capable of building up a climax of absorbing and cumulative interest. The ethics of the situation are not necessarily involved in this praise of the important act of the play. It is sufficient to any admirer of the playwright's art to welcome such an Mrs. J. R. "The Fight" is in this act a masterpiece in comparison with the amateurish output that is offered by most of the youthful playwrights of this country.

It was altogether rather wretchedly wicked. Can such things be? It happened that this scene bore some relation to the dramatic scheme of the relation to the dramatic scheme of the play. The father—Oh, pop; oh, pop, here comes your daddy now—who visited the house of the red wall paper, was persecuting the lady candidate for Mayor of the small Western town in which the action of the play passed. So he had to be got to rights. Altogether this was the most unfortunate part of "The Fight."

Truer to life than some of his colleagues in the field of dramatic literature, Mr. Veiller has placed the scene of his kidnapping in the West. So it cannot be said to possess more than a historic interest for New Yorkers. Mr. Veiller has considerately refrained from reproducing the palmy days of this character which are to be witnessed elsewhere on the stage.

she was assertive and sufficiently dramatic when the situation required, and never monotonous. Of course she was acting a character to which every other in the play contributed just as the rivulets feed the stream. But her personal charm illuminated the role throughout.

William McVay played the Irish boss with humor, and Felix Krembs as the sultor to the ambitious heroine acted with dignity and sincerity.

The rest of the characters passed so much time in the red drawing room of the second act as to make them rather a painful reminiscence. Edward Mawson was the Senator and—but he was the "Oh, pop: oh, pop," and we're trying to get him out of our head as soon as possible.

BOY SCOUTS IN MOVIES.

Throughout the Country.

A seven reel motion picture play called "The Making of a Scout" was shown privately yesterday afternoon at studios of the Edison Kinetoscope Company at 10 Fifth avenue. The pictures were taken at Glen Cove by the Wedepict Motion Picture Company and not only show the activities and camp life of Boy Scouts but depict an interesting story in which but depict an interesting story in which the holidays.
